Bev Simpson grew up in Portland. She knew early on she had a love for helping others. Always busy in school projects and student government, she went on to college where she graduated with an Education degree from Portland State University. She began teaching in Sandy School District, while marrying and starting a family of her own. Raising three children and keeping active in their schools, she worked over a decade with the libraries in Clackamas and Washington counties, doing PR and marketing to share her love of reading. In 1992 she returned to her passion of teaching, working for Oregon City School District. After retirement in 2007, she stayed connected to the students by substituting for many years. Her three grown children have blessed her and her husband with five grandchildren. She enjoys spending time with family and friends, relaxing at the beach and traveling. When she first heard of The Angels in The Outfield, she attended the auction to learn more about its purpose and commitment to children. There she proudly saw many of her former students volunteering. In her search of finding a cause to commit her time and passion, she is now proud to be among such caring people who share her commitment in making a difference in a child's life.
